owing to my fainting spells. Suddenly

I became so excited that I jumped into the mizzen rigging, and was into the top

There arose from my lips a frenzied curse against God that had abandoned me thus, but almost immediately afterward, as if to rebuke me for my wickedness, I noticed a piece of wreckage floating toward me. Hope once more filled my breast, and I swam toward the piece of deckhouse, as it proved to be, and clambering on top threw myself on my face and wept for very wretchedness.

maller even as I looked.

Alone on the wide ocean, a piece of wood the only thing between me and death, dazed and weak from my last terrible experience, what else could I do but weep? Soon I began to feel an in-tense hunger. By the lowest calculation I must have been comatose for three days, so for that time I had had no nour

The thick mist that suddenly came down satisfied my thirst, but there was nothing to eat, nothing to eat. I nearly went crazy as the day wore on.

At last night fell and added the terrors of the blackness of uarkness to the pangs of hunger. I could never tell the horrors of that first night. It was a wonder I was not stark, staring mad when day broke. The second day passed like the first. Nothing to eat, something to moisten my lips, but no sail in sight. The third day broke with an angry sky and angrier sea, and I saw that before the day closed a Cape Horn gale would be raging, with its attendant sleet and cold. I trembled then, for even though I was almost dead and quite without hope I wanted to live. By noon the sea had risen tremendously, and it was with great difficulty that I managed to keep on my raft. By nightfall the gale was raging fiercely, and I was expecting every moment to be engulfed in one of the terrible abysses into which my raft slipped constantly.

home. Everything went smoothly, and This was the most awful night I ever spent-worse even than when I lay to all appearances dead on the cabin table of the Osprey. The flying spoondrift cut me to the bone. The great waves rolled their crested, phosphorescent heads high above me, who, sunk in a black abyss, heard the gale shricking overhead. I felt soon that it could not last much longer. Numbed and weak as I was I clung to my refuge with the energy of desperation and waited bitterly for death.

Finally an immense wave, higher than all that had gone before, raised its wild head and rolled down on me. My time had come. I was swept like a child from my raft and carried on the crest of the monster as I supposed to death. But once again the hand of the Almighty was stretched out to save me. I was dashed with inconceivable violence against something solid as a rock. Ropes were floating all around me. I grabbed several and then swooned.

I awoke and recognized the old hospital of the Osprey. Then I thought my burial and subsequent adventures were all a wandering fancy, and that I had never left the hospital. But I was soon undeceived. A kind face bent over me and I saw once more the features of my good captain. He would not permit me to speak at all that day, but on the next I was allowed to relate my story, which I did in a weak and quavering voice, I can assure you. Then the captain told me that, after burying me, as they thought, they had kept on their course heavy head gale which drove them back act such other business as may come be fore the meeting.

of water to enable the men to walk there they had discovered my body entangled in ropes lying in the lee scupper. At first they thought my corpse had been washed aboard again, as has been several times done, but on lifting me up they saw unmistakable signs of life, and with great awe and wonder carried me into the cabin. As to my comatose sleep, the captain said he had never seen anything more like death.

The Young Kaiser at Ostend.

The Emperor William has never yet received a more delicate compliment than that paid him by the king of the Belgians, who vacated the royal chalet at Ostend in his favor, and allowed the imperial standard of the Hohenzollerus to replace for twenty-four hours the national tricolor. At the last moment the projected military display in the streets and the heard the captain say, and presently the sailmaker came in and measured me for motions what he was doing. The unwieldy Hohenzollern experienced some difficulty in approaching the landing stage, but King Leopold, who, like his brother and nephew, had donned the somewhat unpicturesque uniform of the Prussian cavalry, lessened the tediousness of the wait by conversing with his guest across the bulwarks in stentorian tones. The bluff geniality of the young kaiser won all hearts, and his progress through the streets was marked by an amount of enthusiasm which Belgium is altogether unaccustomed to.
